View parent collection and find aid > In 1954, the musical stage hit BRIGADOON found its way to the big screen as a vehicle for Gene Kelly and Syd Charisse. As such, the emphasis somehow turned from the songs to dance, several of the best songs were scrapped (a few were filmed but didn't make the final cut of the movie), and the bizarre time-traveling tale of the vanishing Scottish city that reappears once every 100 years for a sole day was shot on soundstages with hokey backdrops. While not a failure (it was nominated for several Oscars and won a Golden Globe for cinematography), the film continues to get heavy criticism and doesn't have the gleaming reputation of many similar film musicals from the era. So in 1966, several songs missing from the original film were reinstated, and the result was a high-rated, multiple Emmy winning film. A soundtrack was issued for limited release (for the low cost of $11), available only at Armstrong stores (the sponsor of the film). There were a few downsides. After a beautiful opening that was shot on location, the town of Brigadoon in the TV version was obviously filmed on soundstages too. Given that it was made for TV (and is an early TV movie filmed in living color!), it's forgivable. Although "My Mother's Wedding Day," which was absent from the theatrical version, was reinstated into the TV movie, it was inexplicably omitted from the album -- though a photo from the number appears on the back of the LP jacket. And if I were going to nitpick, the LP versions of many of the songs deviate a bit from those in the film, though not drastically. But easily the biggest downside is that the film has not been seen since it last aired in 1967. It's fallen into that black hole of wonderful TV movies that seem to be lost and forgotten (along with hundreds of others of the ilk). Good thing we have the internet and collectors who share their obscurities or things like this would probably never see the light of day again. Currently the film is on YouTube.LINKS:The Internet Movie DatabaseWikipediaThe Internet Archive (Download) I was recently able to see this, and was thrilled by it. It is far superior to the MGM film version. It was produced on videotape, in color, and is a combination of actual outdoor filming, and interior studio shots, all of which blend together pretty well. The score is arranged by Irwin Kostal and it is gorgeously sung and played. Bob Mackie did some impressive costume designs. Best of all, the cast is perfect in every regard. The original script by Alan Jay Lerner, is adapted by someone else, and I believe they improved it. Most of the additions are comedy lines for Peter Falk's character. For instance, when he meets Meg (Marilyn Mason), she tells him, "Wait till you seem me in me dimity bodice". Jeff (Peter Falk) replies, "Yeah, I bet your bodice will be more dimity than anybody else's". Nothing is drastically changed scene- wise, but they rearranged the order of certain plot events. The choicest moments of the broadcast...Spunk Marilyn Mason singing "My Mother's Wedding Day", the glorious singing voices of Goulet and Sally Ann Howes, and Edward Vilella's fiery sword dance. Most of the score remains intact, including four more numbers than the MGM movie. The only major numbers missing here are Meg's "Love of My Life", the chorus' "Jeannie Packin Up", "Once in the Highlands", and "The Chase" is really changed to an instrumental. Altogether a very memorable BRIGADOON. It is sad that this is not commercially available. 6 out of 6 found this helpful. Was this review helpful? Sign in to vote. Permalink
